

The Battle for Carburetor Bay

A long time ago, on a planet far, far away...there were no people, just....machines! There were many countries on the planet. Each was populated with its own vehicles. There was a Truck country, a Tractor country, a Car country, a Helicopter Country, and a Plane Country. In one particular spot, named Carburetor Bay, in the Country of Cars, there were some cliffs. On one side of the cliffs, there was land, and on the other was water.

Carburetor Bay was a peaceful town. There was very little protection over this part of the planet. The army was not prepared for what was about to happen.

It was another normal day in Carurater Bay when all of a sudden...

"In coming!" shouted the army lookout. A few fighter planes came out of nowhere! They were shooting at Carburetor Bay! The cars tried to fight back, but before they could do anything, the planes were gone, and so was General Chevy, the head of the Army!

The rest of the army wanted to follow after him, but there were still not very many of them, and they could not win a battle against planes with so few in the army. So, the army came up with plan to get more soldiers.

The army broke up into three groups. The first group set up a race. It was in a figure eight shape, with a jump in the middle. Each car had to go around three times. The first half of the cars to finish the race, continued to the next challenge.

The second group set up an obstacle course. The obstacle course had a ramp that had pieces taken out of it, a jump, and a road with a wall next to it, which had a spring that would pop out and push cars as they went by. There were boats that they had to make go by spinning paddles with their wheels. On the other side of the lake, with the boats in it, was the finish line. The fastest half moved on to the next challenge.

The third group set up a battle. The remaining cars were divided into two teams. They shot dart guns at each other's tires. The first team to pop all of the tires of the other team won the battle, and proved they had the skills of an army car.

The now bigger army went out on an expedition to find their leader, General Chevy. They went in the direction the planes had left with General Chevy. They soon came upon an aircraft carrier that they had never seen before, anchored in the bay.

They quickly built a raft from some trees and set out. Suddenly, the airplanes took off from the aircraft carrier and started circling the raft and shooting at it! The car army came up with a plan. A few of the cars were to go onto the aircraft carrier and find the leader of the army. The rest would all stay and defend the raft, creating a diversion for the rescue team, while protecting themselves.

The rescue team was easily able to find General Chevy. He had been tied up. He told them there weren't any other planes on the ship. The rescue team radioed the raft and told them it was safe to board the aircraft carrier. Then the real fight began.

The planes circled the aircraft carrier, and shot at it. The cars shot at the planes from below. One by one, the planes were shot out of the sky, and captured.

When the battle was over, the planes were locked up in the aircraft carrier, and it became a jail.

Once again, Carburetor Bay was peaceful and happy!

The End

