

The Curse of the Lego Brick

Once upon a time there was a big book of curses. One day a little boy opened the book and the evil Lego Brick jumped out and ran out the door. It started eating people's Lego creations! Two hundred years later the town of Bricksylvania was destroyed. Nobody had a home and by now the Lego Brick had an army called "The Goblins of Lego-ness" and they were taking over other Lego villages. The Legos were getting angry. Finally, there was a war because the Goblins wouldn't let the town Lego people have freedom. The Goblins would chain up whoever disobeyed them and they would eat all their Lego food. Until one day, the Lego Justice appeared just in time. The Lego Justice had a dark purple robe and a magic scepter that was blue. He destroyed the Goblins but not the Lego Brick who stayed in hiding, watching for the right time to strike again. When that does happen it will be very bad. He has not been found yet. Although, two years later they found his location and they arrested him. At least that's what they thought. It was actually a plain Lego brick in disguise. So, he is still out there.

One day, a little boy, who has even more power than the Lego Justice when it comes to Legos, found him and put him back in the book. Now the Lego Brick waits for the opportunity to escape again and get his revenge. Until then, the book of curses stays closed, on the little boy's bedroom bookshelf.
