

Snake Demon

It was the year 2035. I was running for my life through one of the last remaining jungles. But before I tell you how the chase began, let me tell you what happened to cause all of this.

Five years ago was when it all started. There was a super nuclear power plant and lab located in Arizona. It was created in 2020, then ten years later in their pressurized building, there was an oxygen leak. When they went to activate the back up oxygen tanks, they found that the tiger, who had been used for tests, had escaped and was somehow infected with nuclear waste. 20 feet long and 8 feet tall the tiger was ripping apart anything bigger than it. Guards came running but before they could pull the trigger of their tranquilizer guns the tiger ripped them to shreds. Then when some of the scientists tried to escape in a helicopter a giant alligator tore out of its cage, grabbed the tail of the helicopter, and ripped it off sending the helicopter spinning and crashing into a lab.

That is when one of the most dangerous animals was seen. It was an enormous Jaguar 12 feet long, 3 feet tall, inch long claws and 3 inch long teeth. But for some reason the Jaguar was still sleeping in its cage despite the explosion. So when guards approached it with chains they felt safe to go into the cage then as if had slept and rolled over onto a thumbtack it woke up and killed all of the guards before they knew what was happening. When scientists ran into the control center they found the worst they could possibly find. At first they thought the people in the control center were just sleeping, but then they noticed rips in their clothes and blood everywhere. Then they knew that the Jaguar had come in this room. Then something caught their eye on one of the security cameras. Somebody was screaming, "We're going to crash we are going to crash!" It was a helicopter pilot and they could see the chopper outside, then it exploded. The propeller was still spinning and it came flying into the control room through the already shattered glass killing the scientists.

Somewhere on the Gulf of Mexico surfers reported seeing a giant snake. A military fleet went to where the surfers reported the giant snake and started looking for it. One of the transport planes noticed unusual amounts of turbulence. They looked out the window and a giant spitting cobra leaped off another transport plane that crashed into a naval destroyer. The snake spun itself around the plane and the plane fell on an aircraft carrier where extra fuel was being carried and both the plane and the aircraft carrier exploded. Then all of the boats and planes started firing at the spitting cobra. Then a fleet of planes started to take off but once they're in the air the cobra spat at them. They tried to land but they're too late. The cobra sunk the aircraft carrier they took off from and the rest of the planes crashed.

After that people in New York City reported a giant snake but this time it's not a cobra it's a reticulated python that was 5 feet in width and 327 feet long or that's what they thought. When divers with harpoons and submarines with torpedoes approached it everybody was talking on the radio. Then they realized they had not heard anything from submarine 5. Somebody looked out the window and saw the wreckage of submarine 5 sunken at the bottom of the harbor. But the snake swimming away did not look like a reticulated python it looked like a forest snake that should be in a forest canopy.

Now the part where I'm getting chased. I'm not exactly getting chased but I know there is something following me so I run away from the noise that I'm hearing from the canopy above. I hear a hiss and I can make a guess that my pursuer is a snake. I am with 10 other people so there's 11 of us all together. But I do not see one of the people and when I count everybody including me there's only 10 of us. Then wait what's that? It's the snake.
